

Carla Campaña Castillo received the Diploma degree in Kinesiology from the Metropolitan University of Educational Sciences, Santiago, Chile, the M.cS, degree in Management in Primary Health Care from the Andrés Bello University and is currently studying the first year of the Doctoral in Science and Innovation in Medicine, at the Universidad del Desarrollo, Chile.

From 2010 to 2013 she worked in respiratory and neurological physiotherapy and in self-managed projects to promote motor and cognitive development in primary school student.

Since 2012 she has been a teacher in secondary, higher and postgraduate education. She worked at Jorge Huneeus Zegers school, Universidad de las Américas and Andrés Bello University. Her mains topics of teaching are health management, public health, health projects and seminar to final project. She also been awarded three funds to finance applied community research projects.

Currently, she is first year student in the Doctor of Science and Innovation in Medicine program, at the Universidad del Desarrollo. Her research interests include inequalities in health, epidemiology, public health, rare diseases, and cancer.